Doomed?

How Much More Can the U.S. Travel Industry Take?

Politics and border hassles have chased away foreign visitors, costing businesses billions. Some fear next year's World Cup won't be enough to bring tourists back.

The Los Angeles investment market sees a rampant decrease in sales volume across multiple product types

Selling experiences, not things: Services overtake physical goods in downtown retail

Homelessness Holds Steady Across Three L.A. Neighborhoods as Rough Sleeping Reaches a Four-Year High

Deep cuts to bus and rail services loom across big cities, small towns

Fearing a financial 'death spiral,' transit providers say they need more support.

Traffic deaths are on the rise.

Commercial Insurance: The Hard Market Is Ending, And Underwriting Discipline Comes Next

Office vacancy rates dip, but landlords continue to grapple with hybrid work

The Doom Loop

Something causes reduced demand for a place

Urban revenues fall:
- Commercial property values
- Sales/hospitality tax volumes
- Transit fare collections etc

There is less money available to provide services

Places/cities/regions cut services to match fiscal reality

Reduced service quantity/quality reduces overall place, city, regional quality

BROOKINGS

The Real Doom Loop

Change is constant. The economy, demographics, climate – what we need from place evolves, sometimes quickly.

Places need to adapt. This requires flexibility, information, basis capacity and most of all – capital flow.

Policies create unequal access to information, capacity, and dollars.

Some places are resilient and nimble – others suffer.

Places in pain are at a competitive disadvantage at meeting the needs of residents, employers, etc.

BROOKINGS

Breaking the cycle

"What does the city of the future look like, and who decides? Much of the rhetoric of the current moment is focused on assigning blame for shortcomings. Instead, we need to encourage what has worked to support great neighborhoods and downtowns and make those things accessible to more people — finding common ground, earning trust and establishing new ways to work together to build something that lasts."

— Tracy in the in the LA Times, 2023

Perceptions and realities around safety

"With the decrease in foot traffic and the actual increase in individuals experiencing homelessness, the two issues together have impacted the perception of safety…Not only are you one of the only 10 people on the street, and now two people are experiencing a mental health crisis."

RICHMOND

"We've moved the conversation from 'I'm scared of getting Covid and giving it to my loved ones' to 'I'm generally not feeling okay going back to the office because I'm seeing all of this crime."

NEW YORK CITY

"Safety, security, substance use, and mental health—just the experience in public areas—are the number-one issues preventing return-to-office." -- Seattle

SEATTLE

"Center City is experiencing disputes from the neighborhoods that have come to Center City, and there have been shootings, even right outside City Hall."
